

Significant Age Gaps in a Relationship

I think a slight age difference between two people in a romantic relationship is acceptable. I think women mature faster than men, and a woman maybe ready to settle down at a younger age than a man. Also, I think the older you are the less strange it is for a larger age gap. If you 30 and you marry a 50 year old, to me that doesn't feel off. I think by 30 you have had a lot of life experience to know what you are looking for and want in life. What I think is strange is when a much older man dates someone who is 25 or younger. My opinion is at that 25 you still don't know who you are, man or woman, and it feels like they are dating someone who could be or look like their child. Plus, how much could you possible have in common?